

Diarrhea & Constipation in Kitten: Kitten Upset Stomach

Diarrhea & Constipation in Kitten: Kitten Upset Stomach

SHARE

- Facebook \(opens in new window\)
- Twitter \(opens in new window\)
- Pinterest \(opens in new window\)
- Download \(opens in new window\)
- Email \(opens in new window\)
- Print \(opens in new window\)

Just like yours, your kitten's digestive system converts the food she eats to energy. If she's poorly, her tummy may be affected, with common problems being diarrhoea and constipation. If your kitten does have either of these symptoms, then it's a good idea to get your vet to check her out.

Kitten Vomiting

If you see your kitten vomiting occasionally there's probably nothing to worry about. Like all cats, she'll do this quite naturally in order to protect herself from harmful substances. However, if your kitten is vomiting regularly, and you're concerned for her health, then take her to the vet.

Kitten Diarrhoea

Diarrhoea can be caused by changing your kitten's food, overfeeding, or by an infection. Your kitten should have a bowel movement at least once a day, so watch out for any changes. Diarrhoea causes dehydration, which isn't good for your kitten. Speak to your vet for advice and reassurance.

Causes

- Intestinal parasites or worms
- Hyperthyroidism
- Change of food and diet
- Pancreatic insufficiency
- Inflammatory bowel disease
- Cancer
- Colitis

Symptoms

The biggest tell-tale symptoms of diarrhoea in kittens include:

- Frequent defecation (at least 2-3 times more than normal)
- More than normal water in the stool
- Accidental defecation outside litter boxes
- Abdominal pain
- Straining when defecating

Usually, in most cases, the diarrhoea in kittens will go away on its own in a few days. All you need to do is ensure your fur kid stays hydrated and keep it under observation. However, take your furball to a vet immediately if the diarrhoea lasts long, or if the stool is bloody or black, or if the diarrhoea is accompanied by fever, kitten vomiting and diarrhoea, lethargy, or loss of appetite.

Treatment

The treatment of diarrhoea for your fur baby would depend on the cause. There are two ways to go about treating diarrhoea in cats, and they are:

Normal treatment -

Depending on the cause, your vet will prescribe medications to stop the diarrhoea. Medications like metronidazole or prednisolone are given to control inflammation. Deworming and probiotics might also be given. For kitten with upset stomach caused by inflammatory bowel disease or colitis, a diet change can be advised by your vet.

Home remedies

You can try the following home remedies before consulting a vet, if your feline buddy only have mild diarrhoea symptoms or alongside continuing the prescription drugs:

- Change their diet

If you notice upset stomach in your kitty right after introducing a new food, stop giving it at once and go back to the food it was used to consuming. Remember whenever you introduce new food to your fur baby, always transition slowly over a week to allow for the cat digestive system to adjust. Follow this simple chart for proper transition and to reduce the chances of diarrhoea caused by a change of diet: Days 1 & 2: $\frac{3}{4}$ current food and $\frac{1}{4}$ new food Days 3 & 4: $\frac{1}{2}$ current food and $\frac{1}{2}$ new food Days 5, 6, & 7: $\frac{1}{4}$ current food and $\frac{3}{4}$ new food Days 8 onwards: only new food

If their regular food is causing the diarrhoea, ensure they are getting the proper nutrients. Nutrient requirements of cats change with age and not getting proper nutrition can mess up their digestive system.

- Keep them hydrated

Make sure their water bowl is filled with clean water at all times. You can also give them broth or canned wet food to ensure they receive enough fluid.

- Clean their litterbox

Keep their litterbox clean at all times for the benefit of your own as well as the cat's health.

- Allow them to rest

Let your cat rest as much as possible by giving them a safe, quiet, and stress-free environment and not getting them excited with toys or plays.

Kitten Constipation

If you see your kitten straining while she's in the litter box, she may be constipated. Like diarrhoea, constipation might be the result of a change in diet, overfeeding or some kind of infection. If the symptoms continue for more than 48 hours, it's best to speak to your vet.

Causes

Constipation in cats can be caused by a number of reasons, such as:

- Overly grooming themselves resulting in too much hair in the digestive tract that stops the stool from passing
- Not enough fibre-intake
- Something lodged in a colon such as a bone
- Kidney diseases
- Spine problems
- Tumours inside the colon blocking the passageway
- Feline megacolon - a disease caused by the colon becoming enlarged with the muscles failing to squeeze out the faeces and resulting in stool build-up

Symptoms

You can tell that your little munchkin is having constipation, if you notice the following:

- Hard and dry stools
- Less than normal passing of stools or not passing stools at all
- Crying when trying to pass stool
- A tense abdomen and hunched posture

If your cat hasn't defecated in 48 to 72 hours and if the above-mentioned symptoms are accompanied by vomiting, nausea, loss of appetite, or any other unusual behaviour, make sure you contact your vet immediately. Kitten constipation can be a sign for other underlying health condition which needs to be diagnosed and treated as soon as possible.

Treatment

The treatment for constipation in your fur kiddo will depend on the cause. There are two ways to go about treating constipation in cats, they are:

Normal treatment

For mild cases, your vet might suggest diet and lifestyle changes such as giving them fibre-rich foods and increasing water intake. Medications along with laxative and probiotics might also be prescribed. Hairball medications can also prove to be effective if hair accumulation is causing the problem. However, if the constipation is severe and your cat hasn't passed stool for several days, your vet might have to do a de-obstipation, which is manually removing the faeces from the colon. In case your cat has megacolon, it might also need to undergo surgery.

Home remedies

If your fur baby has mild constipation, you can try the following home remedies to cure the problem:

- Change food

Have you recently switched your furry friend's food? If yes, then most probably the new food is the reason behind the constipation. Try switching back to the old diet.

- Increase water intake

encourage your pet to drink more water. Give it broth and wet food instead of dry food to increase fluid intake.

- Give fibre-rich food

Does the food your kitty eat has enough fibre as per their daily requirement? Make sure they eat fibre-rich food.

- Include probiotics in the diet

If your cat food doesn't contain probiotics, add them as supplements to improve your kitty's gut health and digestive system.

FAQs for Cat's Upset Stomach

30

Health

1. Q:

How often should you feed a kitten?

A:

Kittens should be fed frequently in small amounts throughout the day. For kittens over 2 months old, kitten food can be given 4 to 5 times a day. From 6 to 12 months old, the number of meals can be reduced to 2 to 4 times a day

2. Q:

What should your kitten drink?

A:

It is important to keep your kitten hydrated, especially if you are feeding them dry food. Kittens do not need milk once they have been weaned off. Instead of milk, it is best to give them clean and fresh water to drink. Ensure that your kitten has fresh water to drink wherever and whenever they need it. Generally, you should start giving them water to drink once you have started giving them a little solid food. Give them fresh, clean water in a shallow bowl. It is best to place it in places where they like to relax. You should not place it in the same place as where they eat.

3. Q:

When should you switch kittens to kitten food?

A:

Besides baby cat food, kittens can try small bites of solid food to familiarise themselves with it. At 2 months old, they should be weaned off mother's milk and switch from baby cat food to wet kitten food.

Foods to avoid

Although you may have good intentions, some human foods are not recommended for cats. Human foods are high in calories, and lack the essential nutrients that cats need. Some of the food that we eat can be very harmful to cats. This includes onions and garlic, milk and dairy products, alcohol, grapes and raisins, caffeine, chocolate, raw eggs and meats, and fat trimmings and bones.

4. Q:

Can kittens eat human food?

A:

Feeding kittens human food can have detrimental effects as kittens have very different dietary requirements compared to humans. Kittens require about 40 essential nutrients to deliver complete nutrition, whether the food is dry, wet, or semi-moist.

Since kittens are carnivores, animal meat is one of the safest human foods to give them as they rely on nutrients found in animal products. There are 11 essential amino acids for kittens that must be supplied in their diet:

- Arginine
- Histidine
- Isoleucine
- Leucine
- Lysine
- Methionine
- Phenylalanine
- Taurine
- Threonine
- Tryptophan
- Valine

These essential amino acids, along with other essential nutrients, are best supplied by animal meat and organs (liver, heart, and kidney). Fish, meat, and poultry are the best choices as they provide all the protein and essential nutrients your kitten needs. It can be minced, ground, or blended so your kitten can eat it easily. However, it is not recommended to feed your kitten too much fish such as tuna and salmon. These fish contain high levels of mercury and can cause mercury poisoning (dizziness, loss of balance and coordination). Make sure everything is cooked thoroughly to destroy any bacteria or parasites before feeding your kitten.

Besides meat, kittens also eat plants occasionally for roughage or fibre. The recommended vegetables for your kitten are carrots, broccoli, and spinach that have been steamed or boiled. These vegetables are also a source for vitamins and minerals. Similarly, make sure that all vegetables are washed and cleaned thoroughly before cooking. Avoid feeding your kitten raw vegetables as it cannot be digested and can cause digestion problems.

How to feed a kitten up to 4 weeks old

As kittens grow, they require different types of food and different ways of feeding to support its growth and development. When kittens are born, they obtain all the nutrition they need from their mother's milk, which is the best baby cat food. It is important to ensure that your kittens and the mother cat are safe and away from any disturbances. This allows them to feed peacefully. Keep your kittens warm and place them in a comfortable position on their stomach as they feed. After 4 weeks, they should be weaned off and introduced to food for kittens.

How to feed a kitten from 4 weeks to 4 months old

Once your kitten reaches 4 weeks old, it may start showing an interest in solid food! You can start to gradually wean off your kitten and introduce them to a bit of solid kitten food. Dry kitten food can be mixed with water so that it is soft enough for kittens to eat easily. Wet kitten food can also be used. Place the food in a shallow dish or bowl to get them used to good eating habits. It is essential to learn how to feed a kitten properly with the right food to help them grow happily and healthily.

How to make kitten food

Homemade kitten food that is prepared using natural and fresh ingredients is a great way to introduce your kitten to different tastes and textures. This helps in their growth and development. Since kittens are carnivores, they can eat most kinds of meat like chicken, beef, and fish that have been minced or ground and then cooked.

Kittens require 4 times more protein than humans. In order to fulfil this need, homemade kitten food needs to contain at least 70 g of protein per 1000 kcal of metabolisable energy (ME). This is equal to roughly 220 g of chicken meat, or 320 g of fish. The meat should be cooked, either by steaming or boiling it. However, if you don't know how to make kitten food, or don't have the time to - don't worry! Whiskas® kitten food is the best kitten food that covers all of your kitten's nutritional needs in a wide range of delicious flavours

SEE ALL

See More Articles Like This

How To Feed Your Newborn Kitten

In the wild, big cats know exactly what they need to eat. By feeding your kitten the right food at the right times, you'll be supporting her natural instincts as a carnivore and solitary hunter.

READ MORE

Cat Allergies

The simplest way to deal with a cat allergy is to stay away from cats! If you're a cat owner, or just love being around those adorable felines, don't worry - there are plenty of ways you can make life easier.

READ MORE

Common Cat Diseases, Their Symptoms And Treatment

Who doesn't love a cat? These tiny little furballs with their adorable face and cute appearance is all one needs to brighten their day. Since time immemorial, cats have been known to be the greatest emotional support animals to their loved ones, helping individuals with depression, anxiety and other physical and mental disabilities.

READ MORE

Learn When Can Kittens Eat Solid Food

While cats are known far and wide for their unmatched love and enthusiasm for food, the same cannot be said for kittens.

READ MORE

Source URL:

<https://www.whiskas.me/care/kitten/health/diarrhea-and-constipation-in-kitten-kitten-upset-stomach>